

Works of Music

An Essay in Ontology

Julian Dodd

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

o

Contents

Introduction	I
1. The Type/Token Theory Introduced	8
1.1. Introduction	8
1.2. Motivating the type/token theory: repeatability	9
1.3. Nominalist approaches to the ontology of music	20
1.4. Musical anti-realism	25
1.5. The type/token theory elaborated	31
1.6. Conclusion	36
2. Types I: Abstract, Unstructured, Unchanging	37
2.1. Introduction	37
2.2. Types introduced and nominalism repelled	38
2.3. Types as abstracta	42
2.4. Types as unstructured entities	48
2.5. Types as fixed and unchanging	53
2.6. Conclusion	56
3. Types II: Platonism	58
3.1. Introduction: eternal existence and timelessness	58
3.2. Types and properties	59
3.3. The eternal existence of properties reconsidered	70
3.4. Types and patterns	75
3.5. Conclusion	80
4. Defending the Type/Token Theory I	82
4.1. Introduction	82
4.2. Unstructuredness and analogical predication	83
4.3. Musical works as fixed and unchanging	86
4.4. Abstractness and audibility (again)	92
4.5. Works and interpretations	94
4.6. Conclusion and resume	97

X CONTENTS

5. Defending the Type/Token Theory II: Musical Platonism	99
5.1. Introduction	99
5.2. Platonism it is: replies to Anderson and Levinson	100
5.3. The existence conditions of works of music	106
5.4. Composition as creative discovery	112
5.5. The nature of the compositional process: replies to objections	121
5.6. Composition and aesthetic appraisal: a reply to Levinson	128
5.7. Composition and aesthetic appraisal: understanding, interpretation, and correctness	135
5.8. Conclusion	142
6. Musical Works as Continuants: A Theory Rejected	143
6.1. Introduction	143
6.2. A theory introduced	144
6.3. Explicating and motivating the continuant view	146
6.4. The continuant view and repeatability	154
6.5. Further objections to the continuant view	156
7. Musical Works as Compositional Actions: A Critique	167
7.1. Introduction	167
7.2. Currie's action-type hypothesis	168
7.3. Davies's performance theory	182
7.4. Conclusion	199
8. Sonicism I: Against Instrumentalism	201
8.1. Sonicism introduced	201
8.2. Sonicism motivated: moderate empiricism	204
8.3. Instrumentation: timbral sonicism introduced	212
8.4. Scores	217
8.5. Instrumentation, artistic properties, and aesthetic content	225
8.6. Levinson's rejoinder	235
8.7. Conclusion	239
9. Sonicism II: Against Contextualism	240
9.1. Introduction: formulating contextualism	240
9.2. Contextualist ontological proposals	243

9.3. Levinson's doppelganger thought-experiments	249
9.4. Artistic, representational, and object-directed expressive properties	256
9.5. Aesthetic and non-object-directed expressive properties	266
9.6. Conclusion: the place of context	275
Bibliography	277
Index	283